the department for international development is coordinating the uk s response to the outbreak of ebola in west africa the international community was very slow to recognise the seriousness of the outbreak of ebola in west africa and the department failed to respond with sufficient urgency to an emerging crisis which could have been contained had action been taken sooner there are promising signs that the department s interventions are having a tangible impact although there remains uncertainty over the future trajectory of the outbreak once the outbreak has been contained the department needs to review whether its current preparedness and protocols when faced with a potential international medical emergency are adequate for effective prevention and response future efforts must be directed to bolstering health care systems in the region and to supporting governments to ensure that these are sufficiently robust there is no scientific justification for the uk government s decision to prevent direct flights to the affected region from the uk something which has likely increased the cost and difficulty of dealing with the outbreak these should be restored as soon as possible the uk government has committed a package of direct support of at least 230 million to help contain control and treat ebola in west africa the department is distributing this money to other departments such as the ministry of defence international institutions and non governmental organisations the uk package focuses predominantly on sierra leone and includes support for the construction of treatment facilities the provision of over 700 treatment beds and the training and management of burial teams telemedicine networks to support healthcare workers in resource limited settings often for humanitarian purposes have evolved over the last decade or so in a largely autonomous way communication between them has been informal and relatively limited in scope this situation could be improved by developing a comprehensive approach to the collection and dissemination of information a recent review identified seven telemedicine networks each of which had been in operation for at least five years and which provided store and forward telemedicine services to doctors in low and middle income countries these networks provide clinically useful services and improved healthcare access however like much of telemedicine the formal evidence for their cost effectiveness remains weak topics of current research interest therefore include the cost effectiveness of telemedicine in resource limited settings outcomes data and methods for gathering it such as patient quality of life following a telemedicine episode the knowledge gain of healthcare staff involved in telemedicine and staff recruitment and retention in rural areas are also of interest finally there is little published information about the performance of these telemedicine networks and methods for measuring it about how best to manage them and about how to share resources between them a collection of articles reporting the current evidence supporting the use of telemedicine in resource limited settings would build the evidence base and should provide a focus for future research it would also serve to raise the profile of this potentially important research field
